E AFA 3332 # 10282  Black Feminist & Womanist Theory  Celeste  3  T 7  R 7-8  LIT 0127
This course presents an interdisciplinary and transnational body of scholarship on the social, political, economic, cultural, and historical contexts of black women’s lives with a particular focus on black women’s roles in the development of democratic ideas globally. We will use Black Feminism(s) and Womanism as conceptual frameworks for knowledge production about black women’s lives and the broader social world. One of the central questions we will ask is: who constitutes as a black woman? Considering the experiences of mixed-race African-American women, black women in Latin America and the Caribbean, immigrant black women, and queer black women will allow us to consider the ways that race, gender, sexuality and nation operate.

E AFA 4931 # 10239  Black Latinx UF History  Morini  3  MWF 3  LIT 0127
Undergraduate and graduate students in this course will actively and substantially contribute to writing Black and Latinx histories of U. Students will embark on intensive research in the Smathers Libraries Special Collections materials and SPOHP’s hundreds of existing interviews on UF history, and apply what they learn to intensive interviewing efforts that address the gaps and flesh out the details of those archives.

C ANG 6930 # 24841  Power & Environment  Paulson  3  M 6-8  GRI 0376
This course brings together natural and social scientists and practitioners to ask: How does power work in and through ecosystems, environmental governance systems, institutions, bodies, and science itself? Participants explore scales ranging from local farms and urban centers to earth systems of atmosphere, geosphere, hydrosphere, and biosphere. Attention is drawn to unequal distribution of environmental benefits and burdens, asymmetrical exchange of material and energy, and contested understandings of human and other nature. Latin American cases, visions and responses are foregrounded. Materials include recent publications like Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Service, Pope Francis’ Encyclical on Care for Our Common Home, The EcoModernist Manifesto, UN Sustainable Development Goals, and the new Framework Convention on Climate Change. As course participants critically analyze diverse approaches to conservation and development, they also work toward building positive alternatives for the future.

This political ecology course explores how masculinities and femininities are shaped by—and influence—environmental management and (re)production of rural and urban landscapes. Course participants develop skills and strategies to strengthen their work in conservation and development with gender-aware language, ethnoecology tools, image analysis, survey design, mapping, photovoice, use of contested terms, acknowledgement of own positions in research and professional practice, and capacity to engage interlocutors in their own positionality. We ask how gender works in and through ecosystems, economies, environmental governance systems, bodies, and science itself, with emphasis on Latin America. Intersectional analysis is used to differentiate high-tech ecomodern masculinities from those of laborers who serve as beasts of burden in extractive enterprises that degrade their ecosystems and their bodies. Postcolonial/decolonial feminisms illuminate historical models based in hierarchical binaries. Feminist care theories highlight long-evolving and newly-emerging masculine practices for child-raising, community-building, and regenerating ecosystems and services.

In this course students will learn about the different political, economic, and social contexts in which police forces have been created in the U.S. and Latin America and how different histories and contexts continue to shape the functions police serve in society. We will review historical perspectives on the origins of the police, analyze cases of policing in urban cities in the U.S. and Latin America, and discuss contemporary challenges to and potential futures of policing. By integrating theory, research, and policy, this course will provide a foundation for students to critically analyze policing as well as state security policies more broadly.

This interdisciplinary graduate seminar situates sociopolitical theory and praxis as a proxy for examining education in Latin America. The course will address 1) how subaltern thought and epistemologies influence conceptualizations of education in Latin America; 2) how education is positioned relative to broader projects of mestizo nationalisms, racial formation, and racial/multicultural reform; and 3) the role of Black social movements in situating education as a key site of contestation. For the purpose of this course, education is broadly conceptualized to include formal systems (e.g., primary, secondary and higher education), various forms of pedagogy (public, fugitive, hip-hop, etc.), and further dialogic acts. The seminar will also feature virtual lecturers from Latin American scholars and scholars of Latin America.

Latin America is a diverse region with vibrant cultures and a rich history. In this course, we will survey the main themes in Latin American history, from the pre-Columbian period to the present, including: conquest and genocide; colonial societies; slavery and resistance; Afro-Latin American cultures; nationalism, liberalism, and populism; revolution and counterrevolution, among others. Students will have a chance to engage with first-hand accounts, scholarly works, and film as we study the peoples, cultures, and events that formed contemporary Latin American nations.

From a young age, you are likely to have learned that in 1492, Columbus sailed the ocean blue, and that the world changed because of it. In this course, we will explore the astonishing complexity of one of the world's great human transformations, which brought together millions of native Americans, Africans, and Europeans on two continents that in 1492 had no name, but would eventually be known as “America.” Starting with Columbus’ footfall in the Caribbean, and continuing with the fall of the Aztec and Inca Empires, we will discuss what “conquest” meant, and who it belonged to. Afterward, the course will explore the development of the colonial economy, as well as the role played in it by native Andeans and Mesoamericans, free and enslaved Africans, and Spanish conquistadors, merchants, priests, and colonial administrators.

C LAH 3931 # 15706 Film, Image & Rev in Cuba
- Instructor: Guerra
- Period: MWF 3
- Room: MAT 0003

Using archival footage, documentaries, feature films, shorts and photographs as well as traditional readings and primary historical sources, this class examines how the role of images plays a central role in the consolidation of Cuba’s revolutionary state, the endurance of one-party rule as well as the everyday perception and consciousness of citizens. Covering 1959-2019 primarily, we explain how a process of democratization transformed Cuba into a Soviet-supported Communist state and then, from 1991-present, a paradoxically Communist Party-led government dependent on capitalism, tourism and foreign investment. Highlights of the class include the messianic cult to Fidel Castro, Cuba’s radical programs that “rehabilitated” prostitutes and peasants, its enforcement of ideological discipline, homophobic policies, gender policies and repression of black consciousness.

C LAH 3931 #23452 Comparative Slavery

- Period: T 4, R 4-5
- Room: MAT 0007, MAT 0005

Comparative Slavery is an upper-level, reading-intensive course that takes a comparative approach to the history of slavery as it developed in different regions and social contexts. The course centers on the Americas and the Caribbean, but we will also consider slavery in Ancient Rome (particularly the legacies of Roman Law in Iberian and later Latin American iterations of the institution). This is mixed undergraduate-graduate course. For undergraduates, previous knowledge about Latin American (or Caribbean) history and at least 3 credits in History are pre-requisite.

What is science? What is technology? What scientific innovations have come from Latin America? And why should historians care about science? This seminar introduces the diffusion, acculturation and adaption of scientific ideas, practices and technology by exploring concepts within Latin America. Interrogating the assumption that scientific knowledge comes from Europe and the U.S. and then spreads throughout the rest of the world, we will highlight the production and exchange of scientific knowledge from and within Latin America. We will discuss themes like mapping, counting, plants, food, eugenics, sex, drugs, and outer space exploration. Class time will include lecture and discussion. We will watch films, listen to music, and examine visual texts. We will also have guest lectures by experts on the history and culture of science and technology in Latin America.

This course is a specialized undergraduate class on Argentina. Argentina has a worldwide reputation for human rights violations. However, those violations are now several decades in the past. Moreover, Argentina has done a remarkable job in addressing that past and compares favorably to many other countries like Chile, Spain and El Salvador. This course is about how Argentina has dealt with and is dealing with its dark past. We begin with a history book that helps understand the divisions within Argentine society. We will continue with a political examination of Argentina’s work to address human rights violations. We end with recent literature on how memory is kept alive… or not. These are controversial topics and we will discuss various approaches in class.

This course addresses the systems of thought and conceptions of the self of Andean and Amazonian peoples, such as perspectivism and relational worldviews, as presented by prominent ethnographers of the ontological turn. The insights of the ontological turn largely originate in structuralist approaches to Amazonian and Andean ethnography. The readings in the class discuss issues of being and becoming, the relations between categories of beings, and the modalities of existence. Ontology debates lie at the intersection between anthropology and philosophy as they question Western binaries, particularly the separation between nature and culture, humans and non-humans. The study of indigenous systems of thought is then contrasted to Western and capitalist rationalities. While taking the ontological turn seriously and examining its philosophical and political contributions, the class also presents the relevant critiques.

How do state development and state capacity shape institutions and practices of law and order? What is the relationship between law, violence, and democracy? When and under what circumstances are laws and rights suspended in the name of order, and what does this suspension mean for the exercise or power and experiences of citizenship? And when and why do state actors seek to disrupt law and order? This course uses historical, sociological, and anthropological approaches to examine... these and other questions related to the (re)production of law and order in Latin America. Throughout the course we will combine social theory with ethnographic material to examine institutions, discourses, and practices of law and order as well as how these are resisted and challenged.

C LAS 4935 # 15767   Democracy in Latin America Lopez  3 F 6-8  MAT 0016

In this Seminar we study and analyze theories and experiences on participatory and populist democracy in recent sociopolitical processes of Latin America. Social movements, left wing parties and “populist” governments have argued that profound political reforms that introduce participatory democracy, i.e., direct democratic institutions and mechanisms, are needed in order to address extreme socio-economic inequalities, and political exclusions in these societies. They are also expected to improve government efficiency, to reduce corruption, and to diminish violence by strengthening community ties among citizens. Participation could and has improved democracy, but it can also be used in the hands of populist leaders such as in Chavez’s Venezuela to dismantle representative liberal institutions that guarantee for pluralism and individual civil rights, producing the breakdown of democracy. Students are expected to review different theories about representative, participatory and populist democracy. They will read theoretical materials and choose for analysis different cases such as the participatory budgets in Brazil and elsewhere, the referendums in Uruguay, and participatory institutions in Colombia and Venezuela.

C LAS 4935 # 15768  LA & Caribbean Migration  Resende 3 T 5  UST 0101

This course provides a clearer understanding and appreciation of Latin American and Caribbean migration to the United States. After a brief historical overview of Latin American/Caribbean migration to the U.S. and presenting some key theoretical concepts, the course focuses in depth on selected migrant groups from Latin America (including PR) and the Caribbean and concludes with issues affecting Latinx migrant communities in today’s political climate. Throughout the semester, we will attend to the following:

- Migrant motives
- U.S. Imperialism as catalyst for migration
- Migrant community formation and Immigrant integration: challenges and opportunities

Our goals are (1) to introduce students in the conservation and development fields to the diverse set of private and public sources for funding their activities (2) to develop the skills needed to fundraise from these sources, and (3) to understand the ethical and legal issues surrounding fundraising.

C LAS 6921 Sect DEPT  Facilitation Skills in Conservation  Williams  3 W 2-4  GRI 376

Professionals working in Conservation and/or Development must know how to work collaboratively as members of in-house teams, inter-organizational partnerships and projects requiring engagement with diverse stakeholder groups. Effective collaboration requires a specific set of skills that range from designing and running effective meetings to helping diverse and often competing interests work and plan together. Graduate students in this class will develop and strengthen facilitation skills and approaches through practice and reflection. By the end of the class participants should feel more confident leading groups, facilitating group decision-making and being effective collaborative problem-solvers both off and on campus.

C LAS 6291 Sect DEPT  Conflict Management  Dain 3 T 3-5  GRI 0376
Conservation and development work involves a challenging mix of multiple and competing actors, complex issues and constantly changing conditions. Serious disagreements among stakeholders can derail even the best of projects, yet most professionals in the field have little to no training in conflict management. Whether disputes are over land use, endangered species or other topics of concern, sustainable solutions to vexing problems require effective strategies for engaging people and bridging differences. Conflict can be draining and destructive, but it also offers opportunities for new ideas and creative problem solving. This practical course provides students with concepts, skills and approaches for understanding and addressing situations of conflict.

C LAS 6938 #25515 Education in Latin America Busey 3 R 3-5 NRN 1-247
This interdisciplinary graduate seminar situates sociopolitical theory and praxis as a proxy for examining education in Latin America. The course will address 1) how subaltern thought and epistemologies influence conceptualizations of education in Latin America; 2) how education is positioned relative to broader projects of mestizo nationalisms, racial formation, and racial/multicultural reform; and 3) the role of Black social movements in situating education as a key site of contestation. For the purpose of this course, education is broadly conceptualized to include formal systems (e.g., primary, secondary and higher education), various forms of pedagogy (public, fugitive, hip-hop, etc.), and further dialogic acts. The seminar will also feature virtual lecturers from Latin American scholars and scholars of Latin America.

C LAS 6938 #15773 Political Economy Martinez Novo 3 R 9-11 CBD 0210
The course explores anthropological and ethnographic writings on capitalism, neoliberalism and post-neoliberalism, labor, production and consumption, and discusses how to apply a political economy lens to our field-based research projects. The course locates the political economy current within the critical anthropological debates that started in the 1970s. Work on Latin America and by Latin Americans figured prominently in this theoretical current. The class examines classic works that combined history and political economy to understand the uneven geographic expansion of capitalism in the Americas. Then, it discusses ethnographic understandings of neo-liberalism as an economic regime, a regime of governance, and a technology of power and subject formation. Finally, it considers the successes and failures of anti-neoliberal struggles and post-neoliberal experiments in the region. The class aims to explain the contribution of political economy approaches to Latin American studies and vice versa.

C LAS 6938 #15834 Law and Policy in the Americas McLendon 3 W 8 355A Holland Hall
This interdisciplinary, cross-listed course is taught at the law school but offered both to law students and graduate students from the Center for Latin American Studies. The seminar evaluates the development of legal systems in the Americas and includes a comparative analysis. Topics include constitutional comparisons, trade and commercial development, alternative dispute resolution mechanism use and development, citizen security and human rights, property rights, and a review of regional judicial reform efforts focusing on efforts to improve access, efficiency and transparency in justice systems as a means to promote democratic consolidation and economic growth. Readings are theoretical and applied, and they focus on differing legal cultures, distinguishing features of the civil and common law systems, the informal economy and access to property rights.

C LAS 6938 #21044 Practicum in International Law Hernandez 3 T R 3-4
The course will provide students with a hands-on familiarity with treaties, the primary international law instrument, in their core context: negotiation. The course will have a seminar setting in which the written work product of the students will satisfy the writing requirement. This term the class will negotiate a US-Cuba Investment Treaty presenting a case in which a U.S. multinational wishes to invest in a newly opening market, Cuba. Students will mock negotiate myriad treaty provisions that facilitate international commerce, such as trade, the environment, investment, labor, culture, education, human rights, transportation, Statute of Forces Agreement, and tax agreements. The course exposes the complexity of international relations and its reflection on the law and its interpretation in domestic and international courts and other dispute resolution fora. Students can satisfy the writing requirement by writing a paper on the topic (or one of the topics) that s/he negotiates, such as trade, investment, labor, culture, education, human rights, transportation, SOFA, and tax agreements. This section meets under Law01 session These dates may not include final examinations. Contact instructor for more info.

The term ‘field work’ is a general descriptive term for the collection of raw data. The term is mainly used in the natural and social sciences studies, such as in anthropology, archaeology, folklore, biology, ecology, environmental science, ethnomusicology, geography, geology, geophysics, linguistics, paleontology, and sociology. This seminar is devoted to an exploration of contemporary directions in fieldwork, anthropological studies, the development of new trends in research, and ethnomusicology. In it, we will examine methodological approaches, theoretical orientations, interdisciplinary dimensions, and compelling issues and concerns in developing an ethnomusicological research design that addresses the aspects and dynamics of gathering data and applying that data to construct an analytical and theoretical body of information to the understand of a specific subject matter ‘topic’ within your own research interests and problems in particular. The seminar also intends to support and help each graduate student to prepare a final document that could, either reflect a specific chapter of a thesis or dissertation, or to assist to design or layout a research proposal.

This class focuses on issues of being and becoming, relations between categories of beings, and modalities of existence. Ontology debates lie at the intersection between anthropology and philosophy as they question Western binaries, particularly the separation between nature and culture, humans and non-humans. Insights of the ontological turn originated largely in structuralist approaches to Amazonian and Andean ethnography. The course addresses the systems of thought and conceptions of the self of Andean and Amazonian peoples as presented by prominent ethnographers, such as perspectivism and relational ontologies. The study of indigenous worldviews is then contrasted to Western and capitalist rationalities. While taking the ontological turn seriously and examining its philosophical and political contributions, the class also presents relevant critiques.

This political ecology course explores how masculinities and femininities are shaped by—and influence—environmental management and (re)production of rural and urban landscapes. Course participants develop skills and strategies to strengthen their work in conservation and development with gender-aware language, ethnoecology tools, image analysis, survey design, mapping, photovoice, use of contested terms, acknowledgement of own positions in research and professional practice, and capacity to engage interlocutors in their own positionality. We ask how gender works in and through ecosystems, economies, environmental governance systems, bodies, and science itself, with emphasis on Latin America. Intersectional analysis is used to differentiate high-tech ecomodern masculinities from those of laborers who serve as beasts of burden in extractive enterprises that degrade their ecosystems and their bodies. Postcolonial/decolonial feminisms illuminate historical models based in hierarchical binaries. Feminist care theories highlight long-evolving and newly-emerging masculine practices for child-raising, community-building, and regenerating ecosystems and services.

This course will study the development of Latino/a culture in the United States. The course will focus on the three major Latino communities: Chicanos or Mexican-Americans, Cuban-Americans, and Neorics or Puerto Ricans in the United States. The goal of the course is to use different cultural expressions – music, religion, art, language, and literature – to explore some of the central issues that affect these groups in order to understand their contributions to American culture and society. The course will present historical, social, and political issues through works of art – both elite and popular expressions – placed in a historical context. The evolution of these three groups will serve as the intellectual framework for the entire course. Here culture is seen mainly from a historical perspective and, at the same time, as the result of the political, social, and educational issues that shaped these communities.

In this course students will learn about the different political, economic, and social contexts in which police forces have been created in the U.S. and Latin America and how different histories and contexts continue to shape the functions police serve in society. We will review historical perspectives on the origins of the police, analyze cases of policing in urban cities in the U.S. and Latin America, and discuss contemporary challenges to and potential futures of policing. By integrating theory, research, and policy, this course will provide a foundation for students to critically analyze policing as well as state security policies more broadly.
How do state development and state capacity shape institutions and practices of law and order? What is the relationship between law, violence, and democracy? When and under what circumstances are laws and rights suspended in the name of order, and what does this suspension mean for the exercise or power and experiences of citizenship? And when and why do state actors seek to disrupt law and order? This course uses historical, sociological, and anthropological approaches to examine these and other questions related to the (re)production of law and order in Latin America. Throughout the course we will combine social theory with ethnographic material to examine institutions, discourses, and practices of law and order as well as how these are resisted and challenged.

C LAS 6939 # 15807  Democracy in Latin America  Lopez - Maya  F 6-8

In this Seminar we study and analyze theories and experiences on participatory and populist democracy in recent sociopolitical processes of Latin America. Social movements, left wing parties and “populist” governments have argued that profound political reforms that introduce participatory democracy, i.e., direct democratic institutions and mechanisms, are needed in order to address extreme socio-economic inequalities, and political exclusions in these societies. They are also expected to improve government efficiency, to reduce corruption, and to diminish violence by strengthening community ties among citizens. Participation could and has improved democracy, but it can also be used in the hands of populist leaders such as in Chavez’s Venezuela to dismantle representative liberal institutions that guarantee for pluralism and individual civil rights, producing the breakdown of democracy. Students are expected to review different theories about representative, participatory and populist democracy. They will read theoretical materials and choose for analysis different cases such as the participatory budgets in Brazil and elsewhere, the referendums in Uruguay, and participatory institutions in Colombia and Venezuela.

C LAS 6938 # 15808  LA & Caribbean Migration  Resende  3  R 4-5  UST 0101

This course provides a clearer understanding and appreciation of Latin American and Caribbean migration to the United States. After a brief historical overview of Latin American/Caribbean migration to the U.S. and presenting some key theoretical concepts, the course focuses in depth on selected migrant groups from Latin America (including PR) and the Caribbean and concludes with issues affecting Latinx migrant communities in today’s political climate. Throughout the semester, we will attend to the following:

- Migrant motives
- U.S. imperialism as catalyst for migration
- Migrant community formation and Immigrant integration: challenges and opportunities

C LAS 6938 # 21556  Power & Environment  Paulson  3  M 6-8  GRI 0376

This course brings together natural and social scientists and practitioners to ask: How does power work in and through ecosystems, environmental governance systems, institutions, bodies, and science itself? Participants explore scales ranging from local farms and urban centers to earth systems of atmosphere, geosphere, hydrosphere, and biosphere. Attention is drawn to unequal distribution of environmental benefits and burdens, asymmetrical exchange of material and energy, and contested understandings of human and other nature. Latin American cases, visions and responses are foregrounded. Materials include recent publications like Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Service, Pope Francis’ Encyclical on Care for Our Common Home, The EcoModernist Manifesto, UN Sustainable Development Goals, and the new Framework Convention on Climate Change. As course participants critically analyze diverse approaches to conservation and development, they also work toward building positive alternatives for the future.

C LAS 6938 # 21557  Spatial Econometrics & Modeling  Walker  3  R 6  TUR 3018

This course provides students with a working knowledge of spatial regression, critical to the analysis of spatial data sets and processes. It also exposes students to powerful software such as MATLAB, which enables them to compose their own computer scripts. Some background in statistical analysis is advised.

CPO 4384 # 23176 Argentina and Politics of Memory Anderson 3 T 4-5 DAU 0342

This course is a specialized undergraduate class on Argentina. Argentina has a worldwide reputation for human rights violations. However, those violations are now several decades in the past. Moreover, Argentina has done a remarkable job in addressing that past and compares favorably to many other countries like Chile, Spain and El Salvador. This course is about how Argentina has dealt with and is dealing with its dark past. We begin with a history book that helps understand the divisions within Argentine society. We will continue with a political examination of Argentina's work to address human rights violations. We end with recent literature on how memory is kept alive… or not. These are controversial topics and we will discuss various approaches in class.

The rich and often conflicting diversity of the Americas as well as the historical experiences that allow us to speak of the Americas as a whole: The conquest, the colonial period, the struggles for independence against (neo)colonialism, the clashing and mixing of cultures, the yoke of slavery and servitude, the formation of rigid social hierarchies, and the frustrated search for democracy and economic development. These phenomena are followed in a variety of artistic media, from painting to poetry and from music to film. (H and N) Credits: 3; Prereq: SPN 3300 or SPN 3350, or equivalent coursework approved by the undergraduate advisor.
