AFRICAN AMERICAN STUDIES

E AFA 3240 Sect 121H	The African Diaspora	Henson	3	MWF 3	CSE E220
----------------------	----------------------	--------	---	-------	----------

As a growing and exciting field, African diaspora studies analyzes the migrations, cultures, histories, and politics of African-descended people around the globe. It also grounds the African diaspora within global racial knowledges as well as localized racial and gender hierarchies that cross social, economic, cultural, political, and imperial lines. This course will engage key theorizations, interventions, debates, and subjects in this field. Readings span across sociology, literary criticism, Black studies, history, anthropology, postcolonial studies, transnational feminism, queer color of critique, and media studies. Course aim is for students to understand and articulate the various struggles and freedom dreams of Afro-diasporic peoples in Africa, the Americas, Europe, and Asia. At the end of the course, students should be able to use theoretical approaches to engage the various cultural, intellectual, and political imperatives within the African diaspora as a means to conceptualize the modern world. Particular emphasis will be given to the Black Atlantic.

C AFS 6905 Sect 046D	Conservation Dev Practicum	Galloway	3	R 6-8
----------------------	----------------------------	----------	---	-------	--

This primary objective of this course is to provide students with guidance and structure for the analysis of information generated during their 2017 summer field practicum projects and the preparation of final reports from these efforts. Students gain experience in the analysis of information and the interpretation of results, linking findings across disciplines and scales. By carrying out this process as a group, students learn from their peers who carried out field work in other contexts and disciplines. Required for MDP students.

C AFS 6905 Sect 0460	Development Administration	Galloway	3	W 3-5	WEIM 3024
----------------------	----------------------------	----------	---	-------	-----------

This course places emphasis on specific tools, processes and concepts linked to the praxis of Development Administration that MDP graduates should be familiar with before embarking on their careers as development practitioners. In addition to important concepts and tools related to Development Administration, attention is focused on common problems and errors that affect the success and impact of development initiatives. Required for MDP students. Others may also register to take this course.

C LAS 4935 Sect 1C56 Cuban Cinema: Beyond the Rev Fusco 3 W 6-8 MAT 0105
This course we will consider how post-revolutionary Cuban filmmakers have responded to social crises such as the failed 10 million ton sugar harvest of 1970, the storming of the Peruvian Embassy and subsequent Mariel Boatlift of 1980, the economic duress of the Special Period and the demise of socialist utopianism that marks the post-Soviet era. We will also look at films and newer video productions that have generated ideological crises, often leading to censorship. Among the films to be studied are Saba Cabrera Infante and Orlando Jimenez Leal's P.M., Sara Gomez's Una isla para Miguel, Nicolas Guillén Landrian's Coffea Arabica, Humberto Solas' Un día en noviembre, Daniel Diaz Torres' Alicia en el país de las maravillas, Juan Carlos Cremata's Chamaco, and Carlos Lechuga's Santa y Andres. In addition to studying films made in Cuba we will discuss key documentary and fiction films produced about Cuba from outside the island, such as Nestor Alemendros' Conducta impropia, and Agustí Villaronga's El rey de la Habana.

For most of human history, societies have existed without the police. It wasn't until the 19th century that police forces were organized in the United States and Latin America. Why were these police bodies created? Why did they multiply and spread across the Americas? What role do the police play in modern society? And how do local, national, international, and transnational contexts change how policing is done? These are some of the questions and topics that we will discuss in this course. In the first section of the course, we will review theoretical approaches to understand and analyze policing. In the second section of the course, we will compare the creation and development of police forces in the U.S., Venezuela, Chile, El Salvador, and Nicaragua, looking at how the contexts and histories of each place shaped police organizations and practices. In the third half of the course we will discuss contemporary issues in policing, including topics such as community policing, terrorism, technological advancements, and immigration. We will end the course by looking at the current challenges to policing in the Americas, discussing how social movements, police violence, as well as changes in the global economy might shape policing in the future. By integrating theory, research, and policy, this course will provide a foundation for students to better understand how policing is done as well as critically analyze state security policies, state capacity, and democratic security.

This course will use the scholarly works and experiences of women of color to explore topics including media and popular culture, immigration, globalization, colonialism, the state, and academia. We will pay particular attention to scholars of U.S. "Third World," Chicana, Caribbean, and South Asian feminisms as we ask the question, "What is the relationship between women of color feminisms and globality?"
