From February 22nd to 25th the Center for Latin American Studies coordinated African Dance in the Diaspora, a four-day multi-media event that explored the current scholarship and practice of African dance. Through film, academic presentations, discussions, performance, and a panel presentation, the African Dance in the Diaspora event brought together scholars and practitioners of African diaspora dances and cultures to engage in cross-cultural and interdisciplinary discussions on modernization, creolization, globalization, identity, and more.

The four-day event began on Wednesday February 22nd with a community outreach activity at Hoggetowne Middle School. Guest artist Elizabeth Chin led a class of middle-school students in an Afro-Haitian dance workshop. Chin, a core faculty member at Art College of Design, has studied, taught, and performed Haitian Folklore for over 20 years, both in the U.S. and in Haiti. Her teachers include Jean Leon Destiné, founder of Haiti’s national ballet, Emerante de Pradines Morse, Mona Amira, Florencia Pierre, Elle Johnson, and Katherine Dunham.

On Thursday afternoon visiting scholar Yvonne Daniel gave a lecture for students, faculty and community members entitled “Citizenship in the Swirl of Diaspora Dance Genres: a video/lecture presentation.” UF professor Faye Harrison introduced Daniel who is a Professor Emerita of Dance and Afro-American Studies at Smith College, and shed light on Daniel’s extensive contributions to the field of diasporic dance, especially in the Caribbean region. Her specializations also include cross-cultural dance and performance, and social inequality. Daniel’s talk further traced her past work in the Americas, and more specifically in Cuba where she conducted extensive research on a wide variety of dance genres including salsa, rumba, and guaguancó as forms of collective identity expression and resistance.

On Friday, UF Dance Professor, dance ethnographer, Certified Laban Movement Analyst, filmmaker, choreographer and author Joan Frosch preceded the panel discussion by screening her film “Movement (R)evolution Africa: A story of an art form in four acts.” The documentary features African experimental choreographers as they work individually and collectively question, define, and redefine African dance.

Following the screening, Dr. Frosch facilitated a panel discussion that included: Yvonne Daniel who gave a talk called “Agency in Spanish Caribbean Social Dance;” Elizabeth Chin whose presentation was titled, “Moving Spirits, Knowing Bodies and Dancing Politics in the Haitian Diaspora;” Camee Maddox, a doctoral student in Anthropology at UF who presented her research in Martinique in a talk called “Performing and Belonging in the Society of Bele;” and Jeanguy Saintus who spoke about contemporary fusions in his own choreographic work and in the diaspora in general in “Dance Sacré: entre Tradition y Modernité (Sacred Dance: between Tradition and Modernity).” Saintus is Choreographer and Founder of Ayikodans, and is himself a dancer and educator. His work expresses the rich fusion of Caribbean culture and the contemporary life of his country, Haiti, through the body. He studied anthropology, sociology and languages, Haitian traditional dance, classical, modern and contemporary technique.

Puerto Ta’gwa, a local Colombian café, hosted a reception where attendees were treated to a contemporary Afro-Brazilian dance performance by New York based artist Janete Silva. The event came to a close on Saturday with an open dance workshop lead by Jeanguy Saintus with live drumming provided by master drummer Daniel Brevil. Over forty members of the UF and Gainesville community attended the workshop, where participants experienced Saintus’ own unique blend of traditional Haitian dance and contemporary dance.

The African Dance in the Diaspora event was sponsored by the UF Center for the Humanities and the Public Sphere, UF Center for Latin American Studies, Center for World Arts, the UF Black Graduate Student Organization, UF Performing Arts, UF School of Theatre and Dance, and Puerto Ta’gwa.

This past semester the Center stepped up its efforts to increase research and educational exchanges with Brazil. In early April I accompanied David Sammons, Dean of the International Center, in representing UF at a ceremony in Washington, D.C. to sign a new cooperative agreement between the University of Florida and CAPES, the Brazilian Federal Agency for Support and Evaluation of Graduate Education (see p. 8). The signing ceremony was timed to coincide with President Dilma Rousseff’s visit to Washington to promote greater academic and business ties between Brazil and the US. The new agreement with CAPES formalizes UF’s participation in Brazil’s new “Science without Borders” initiative, which will send 100,000 Brazilian students in the STEM fields to study abroad over the next four years. UF will admit up to twenty CAPES-funded undergraduate students a year as well as PhD students and post-doctoral researchers. In addition to promoting student exchanges, the agreement also will promote faculty exchanges, collaborative research projects, and workshops and seminars between UF and Brazilian researchers. Given the long history of collaborative partnerships with Brazilian institutions, UF is a natural destination for Brazil’s top STEM students.

The CAPES-UF Partnership will be administered by the Center’s Florida-Brazil Institute, which was created by the Florida Legislature to help strengthen the state’s foreign relations and to promote business, educational, cultural and scientific exchange between Florida and its largest international trading partner. I recently appointed Dr. Emilio Bruna, Associate Professor of Latin American Studies and Wildlife Ecology and Conservation, as Director of the Institute. My hope is that under Bruna’s leadership the Florida-Brazil Institute will become the go-to resource on Brazil for state government, academic, and business communities in Florida.

As part of the Center’s new Brazil-focused activities, we have been developing a new linkage initiative with the Fundação Getulio Vargas (FGV) in Rio de Janeiro. Besides supporting joint UF-FGV collaborative research projects, we are planning a major conference for February 2013, entitled “Emergent Brazil.” The conference will bring together scholars from Brazil, Europe, and the US to focus on Brazil’s changing role as an emerging power with global reach. Topics will range from policy issues (economic development, energy and climate change, environmental conservation, urban crime, and international relations) to Brazil’s cultural and religious influence, to contemporary politics.

On another front, the Center received a $15,000 grant - renewable for up to three years – from the Tinker Foundation. The grant will be matched 100% by UF’s Office of Research. The grant will support pre-dissertation field research in the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking countries of the Western Hemisphere. For summer 2012 we were able to support 18 students’ field research with funds from the Tinker grant (see p. 16).

Finally, the Center also received a $400,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to develop an interdisciplinary program on immigration, religion, and social change (see p. 7). The grant will be used to develop effective models of intervention, exchange, and outreach to address the urgent needs of immigrant communities in the U.S. South. To carry out the program, the Center is partnering with faculty in the Colleges of Education, Liberal Arts and Sciences, and Nursing, and with non-governmental organizations in the region. The grant builds upon years of innovative research on Latin American immigration to new destinations in the U.S. South and recognizes the Center’s long tradition of engaged scholarship that crosses disciplines, links academics to practitioners, and works in partnership with a wide range of stakeholders.
The Center for Latin American Studies was pleased to welcome Dr. Joe Foweraker as the Spring 2012 Bacardi Family Eminent Scholar. Dr. Foweraker is a Professor of Latin American Politics at the University of Oxford and has recently stepped down as Head of Oxford’s School of Interdisciplinary Area Studies. In addition to his impressive list of accomplishments, Dr. Foweraker has been a visiting professor at several universities throughout the United States and Latin America, and served as the Executive Director of the European Consortium for Political Research from 2000-2003.

Over the course of his career Dr. Foweraker has carried out extensive fieldwork in Brazil, Spain and Mexico, and has published monographs on these three countries with Cambridge University Press (in 1981, 1989 and 1993). He has also published widely on social mobilization and citizenship rights in Latin America, including books with Pluto Press (1995) and Oxford University Press (1997). More recently he has pursued comparative research on democracy, publishing a series of articles on the quality of democratic government, editing an Encyclopedia of Democratic Thought (Routledge 2001), and co-authoring a textbook on Governing Latin America (Polity 2003). His current research applies classical democratic theory to examine the nature of contemporary democratic systems of Latin America.

During his time at the University of Florida, Dr. Foweraker taught a graduate seminar entitled Democracy in Latin America, which focused on the processes of democratization, the politics of the emerging democratic regimes, and the configuration and quality of the contemporary democratic governments in Latin America. He also served as a thesis committee member for two MALAS students. While in the United States he has given talks at Occidental College, Los Angeles, and at Miami Dade College.

At the annual SECOLAS and Center for Latin American Studies conference this spring, Dr. Foweraker gave the keynote Bacardi Lecture to an audience of over two hundred students, faculty, and Latin American scholars. He addressed the theme of "Democracy and its Discontents in Latin America", discouraging a continuing focus on the democratic failures of Latin America in favor of a perspective that locates Latin American democracy in the context of more complex political systems.

SECOLAS/Annual Conference

HIGHLIGHTS

The Center for Latin American Studies at the University of Florida hosted the 59th Annual Meeting of the Southeastern Council of Latin American Studies (SECOLAS) on the UF campus in Gainesville, FL, Thursday, March 29 to Saturday, March 31, 2012. The meeting also served as the Center’s 61st Annual Conference. SECOLAS was founded in 1954 and, along with the Rocky Mountain Council for Latin American Studies (RMCLAS), is one of the two oldest regional organizations focused on Latin American Studies in the US. It predates the Latin American Studies Association (LASA) by several years. UF faculty members were among the founders of SECOLAS and UF has twice before hosted the meeting (once in the 1950s and once in the 1960s).

This year’s conference theme was “The Struggle for Democracy in Latin America.” The meeting featured 44 panels, many of them devoted to the conference theme, while others addressed diverse aspects of Latin America, the Caribbean, and Latina/os in the US—e.g., history, education, literature and the arts. Prominent topics included transnationalism, gender, and ethnicity. Several papers focused on social movements and local and indigenous struggles for environmental democracy and justice. Papers were presented by faculty members, independent scholars, and graduate students. UF political science doctoral student and LAS certificate candidate Kevin Funk won the Edward Moseley Award for his paper “The Political Economy of South America’s Global South Relations: State, Transnational Capital, and Social Movements.” Former UF faculty member Martha Ellen Davis presented her documentary, “Papá Liborio: The Living Saint of Maguana,” on folk Catholicism, nationalism and popular resistance in the Dominican Republic.

Other meeting highlights included a panel devoted to the late David Bushnell, a longtime UF professor of history, and his contributions to the historical study of Colombia, and a roundtable discussion on Latin American democracy in comparative perspective moderated by CLAS dean Paul D’Anieri and featuring Leslie Anderson, Michael Bernhard, and Leonardo Villalón of UF’s Political Science department, and visiting professor Joe Foweraker (University of Oxford). The panel was dedicated to the memory of Guillermo O’Donnell, a towering figure in comparative and Latin American politics who recently passed away in his native Argentina, and dealt in large part with the applications and utility of O’Donnell’s insights from his pioneering studies of Latin American authoritarianism and democratic transitions to other parts of the globe, particularly Eastern Europe and Africa.

The conference presented lively musical performances by a trio composed of UF faculty members Welson Tremura, Larry Crook and Charles Perrone, and by the popular local Latin band Gilberto de Paz and the Tropix. The conference’s exhibit room included displays and representatives from the University Press of Florida, Wiley Blackwell, the Latin American Collection of the UF Smathers Library, and the UF Center for Latin American Studies. The conference drew more than 200 participants from some 22 institutions across the US and Latin America. Among the participants were several faculty members and six graduate students from the Universidad Veracruzana, Mexico, a faculty delegation from Bethune-Cookman University, and a number of secondary school teachers sponsored by the Center’s Outreach program.

FEATURED SPEAKERS

Joe Foweraker

Paul Drake
Paul Drake, Professor Emeritus at the University of California, San Diego, delivered the keynote address at the SECOLAS Awards Banquet in Emerson Hall on Friday evening. His speech “The Historical Evolution of Political Institutions in Latin America,” explained how the Americas have become the most democratic region in the world alongside Europe. He credited this evolution to a change in the distribution of social power, and the willingness of elites to obey national institutions. Elections and their results have changed greatly over time as they now reflect the demands of most national populations. This trend mirrors the early 1800s when widespread political participation was in effect, before the elite stifled the popular vote from the 1830s to the beginning of the 1900s, which led to unstable conditions, centralism and contentious elections.

Drake identified electoral advances as the key reason why Latin America has become more democratic over time. He posited that these advances drew the lower classes into the political arena, demonstrated the ideal practice of being a citizen, and encouraged them to become angry when this standard was not achieved. This phenomenon fueled the support of populist democracy through the 1970s and encouraged the regional change from authoritarian to democratic rule between 1979 and 1990. The emergence of the new left in the 2000s has brought about the re-writing of constitutions, more respect for the rule of law and more honest, widespread democracy. Drake concluded optimistically, stating that Latin American democracy could last a long time in the face of criticism though he expects the tension between the populist and protective democracy to continue.

Deborah Yashar
The Friday luncheon address in the Reitz Union was given by distinguished scholar and professor of politics and international relations at Princeton University, Dr. Deborah Yashar. In keeping with the theme of “Democracy in Latin America,” Dr. Yashar’s lecture, “Democracy, Citizenship and Violence in Contemporary Latin America” focused on contemporary violence in Latin America and its implications for citizenship. Dr. Yashar called the audience’s attention to the startling statistics that mark Latin America as the most violent region in the world. Yashar noted that Latin America boasts the unfortunate distinction of having over three times the world’s average for homicide by firearms.

Yashar offered her hypotheses for this unique situation in post-authoritarian and post-civil war Latin America. Whereas most scholars usually cite the legacies of violence, the levels of inequality and poverty, and the strength of civil society as explanations for violence in the region, Yashar proposed that we look at patterns of violence through a focus on why, where and when. The “why” that Yashar suggests is the current changing geography of transnational illicit economies throughout Latin America. Yashar noted that the largest increases of violence fall along the transit routes of this illicit economy. In terms of where, Yashar suggested that we focus on countries that have weak or complicit states as they tend to exhibit a pattern of providing a haven for or attracting illicit actors. In this regard, Yashar points to the growing number of gangs and organized crime syndicates in many of these states. Finally, Yashar noted that when competition over territory exists, either between these illicit actors or between the state and these actors, levels of violence tended to surge in the region.

Dr. Yashar’s address was a part of a larger work, tentatively entitled Violence, Citizenship, and Public Security in Post-Authoritarian Latin America. Yashar’s hypotheses for violence in the region offered the audience an engaging way of conceptualizing the issues of crime in Latin America, and elicited a number of questions that led to extended dialogue well after the address.

INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM:
Water, Forests and People: Towards Integrative Research on Dams, Natural Resources and Society in the Amazon
January 23 - 25, 2012

Departments from across UF collaborated in organizing an International Symposium in late January on Water, Forests and People: Towards Integrative Research on Dams, Natural Resources and Society in the Amazon. The program encompassed three days of activities to promote interdisciplinary collaboration in the development of a research plan and proposal designed to assess the effects of hydroelectric dams in the Amazon using an integrative approach. Sponsors included the Center for Latin American Studies, the Tropical Conservation and Development Program, the Amazon Conservation Leadership Initiative, the UF Water Institute, and the Florida Climate Institute. The Symposium was organized by Dr. Anthony Oliver-Smith (Emeritus Professor of Anthropology, UF), Dr. Simone Athayde (Center for Latin American Studies, UF) and Dr. Stephanie Bohlman (School of Forest Resources and Conservation, UF).

The Symposium brought together U.S. and Brazilian scholars and experts to discuss dam construction projects in Brazil, primarily located in the Amazon. Much of the research on dams has been limited to studying their environmental consequences. Examining the impact of dams through assessments that incorporate social, cultural, ecological, economic and biological dimensions is essential to better understand their developmental implications. This event proposed to draw on the synergies between academic disciplines to expand the scope of such impact assessments. The Symposium was part of the Amazon Dams Program, which seeks to establish a binational research program between UF and three universities in the Brazilian Amazon, along with other U.S. researchers and students. This initiative aims to explore the social and environmental effects of dams by facilitating knowledge sharing and interdisciplinary research cooperation at an international level in the search for sustainable solutions.

Dr. Philip Fearnside, the keynote speaker, delivered a presentation on “Dams and Climate Change in the Brazilian Amazon.” Dr. Fearnside has been a Research Professor at the National Institute for Research in Manaus, Brazil since 1978. He has been an acknowledged authority on Amazon ecology for many years. His presentation provided an in-depth look at the environmental consequences of the Belo Monte dam project as well as the political and economic controversies surrounding this issue. Touted to be a source of “clean energy” by the Brazilian government, Dr. Fearnside explained that hydroelectric dams can be more dangerous due to the greenhouse gas emissions that result from these expansive development projects. They also cause social displacement and significant ecological damage. These dams have become a central component of Brazil’s energy policy to satisfy domestic consumption and process raw materials for export, an end that Dr. Fearnside considered to yield little economic benefit at excessive environmental cost. He highlighted the unsustainable nature of Brazil’s energy policy through its failure to promote conservation and alternative energy sources. The government has actively confronted negative press and public criticism to minimize the perceived negative consequences associated with dam construction. Dr. Fearnside’s address conveyed the gravity of the costs associated with hydroelectric dam development and provided insight into the political motivators underlying these projects.

Following Dr. Fearnside’s presentation, three discussion sections delved into the social, natural science and policy impacts of dams. The first section addressed the destabilizing social consequences of dams and the emergence of social movements against such projects on a global level. During the second session, panelists provided a comprehensive look into the resulting environmental consequences from a natural science perspective. The final segment addressed the policy and regulatory issues associated with dam construction. The remainder of the Symposium was devoted to promoting interdisciplinary exchanges through break out group discussions to identify key research questions and how to best develop an integrative research plan to address these inquiries. The program culminated with planning a proposal to design and implement a binational research project to study the broad consequences of dam development projects drawing on the ideas generated during the event.

The Symposium’s panels called attention to the depth and breadth of the consequences resulting from dam construction. These problems are not limited to conservation and environmental issues. They affect ecosystems, people’s lives, economic development and a number of other socio-ecological issues that are deeply interconnected. Apart from drawing attention to the Belo Monte Dam project, the Symposium attempted to expand the problem-solving approach undertaken by academic experts by promoting public discourse on the substantial effects these projects have on our societies, whether at the local or global level. This Symposium was intended to be the first of many collaborative endeavors between UF and its Brazilian colleagues to deepen scholarship and promote awareness about the problems created by dams in an effort to improve public policies related to their implementation in the Amazon.

The Center for Latin American Studies has received a $400,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to develop an interdisciplinary program on immigration, religion, and social change.

The grant will be used to develop effective models of intervention, exchange and outreach to address the urgent needs of immigrant communities in the US South. The center is partnering with faculty in the colleges of Education, Liberal Arts and Sciences and Nursing, and with nongovernmental organizations in the region.

Principal activities will include: developing a support network for local organizations working in the region on immigrant integration and local civic engagement; working with local schools to train educators and community leaders, build family-school-community partnerships and generate appropriate educational materials; implementing and evaluating grassroots programs to improve health literacy, health access and build leadership in vulnerable immigrant communities; developing a specialization in migration studies within the master’s degree in Latin American studies at UF; and establishing an academic service learning program with civic or religious organizations that serve the immigration community in the areas of citizenship, naturalization, health care, education and human rights.

Philip Williams, Director of the Center for Latin American Studies, notes that “the grant builds on years of innovative research on Latin American immigration to new destinations in the U.S. South. The grant also recognizes the center’s long tradition of engaged scholarship that crosses disciplines, links academics to practitioners and works in partnership with a wide range of stakeholders.”

UF Signs new Cooperative Agreement with CAPES-Brazil

Philip Williams, Director of the Center for Latin American Studies, and David Sammons, Dean of the International Center, represented UF at a ceremony in Washington, D.C. to sign a new cooperative agreement between the University of Florida and CAPES, the Brazilian Federal Agency for Support and Evaluation of Graduate Education. The new agreement formalizes UF’s participation in Brazil’s new “Science without Borders” initiative, which will send 100,000 Brazilian students in the STEM fields to study abroad over the next four years. UF will admit up to twenty CAPES-funded undergraduate students a year as well as PhD students and post-doctoral researchers. In addition to promoting student exchanges, the agreement also will promote faculty exchanges, collaborative research projects, and workshops and seminars between UF and Brazilian researchers.

“UF is a natural destination for Brazil’s top STEM students,” said Emilio Bruna, Director of UF’s Florida-Brazil Institute. “We have had decades of productive research and education exchanges with Brazil, as well as internationally recognized programs in many of the disciplines that are priority areas for the Science without Borders program. This agreement builds on our historic partnerships to expand the opportunities to work with Brazil available to the UF community.”

The CAPES-UF Partnership will be administered by the Florida-Brazil Institute, which was created by the Florida Legislature to help strengthen the state’s foreign relations and to promote business, educational, cultural and scientific exchange between Florida and its largest international trading partner. The Florida-Brazil Institute is based in the Center for Latin American Studies.

U.S.-Brazil Higher Education Consortia Program

The Center continues to pursue student and faculty exchange opportunities as part of a four-year grant that is jointly administered by the US Department of Education’s Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE) and the Brazilian Ministry of Education (CAPES). Participants in the program seek to explore the process, dynamics, and implications of multiculturalism from diverse interdisciplinary perspectives. The four partner institutions include UF and Vanderbilt University in the US, and Universidade Federal de Pernambuco (UFPE) and Universidade Federal do Rio Grande Do Sul (UFRGS) in Brazil.

This spring, the consortia initiated the first wave of student and faculty exchanges between the four universities.

In April 2012, the Center, along with Vanderbilt University, hosted Dr. Parry Scott (UFPE) and Dr. Ondina Leal (UFRGS) for the first faculty exchange. Dr. Leal, a Professor in the Graduate Program of Anthropology at UFRGS in Porto Alegre, Brazil, is currently developing research in the themes of intellectual property and occupational health and safety culture. Dr. Scott is a Professor in the Department of Social Science at UFPE and is currently conducting research on “The Family in the Middle of the World: Negotiating Power and Rights and International Migration”, “Violence against women in Rural Contexts in Pernambuco”, and “Three Poles of Development and the Reproductive Life of Young Women.” While in Gainesville, Leal and Scott participated in a special colloquium presentation, met with students and faculty members about the exchange program, and explored possible opportunities for collaborative research.

In the spring 2012 semester, the Center welcomed two Brazilian exchange students as part of this program. Carolina Carneiro (UFPE) worked with Dr. Rosana Resende to explore issues of identity among Brazilian students at UF. Bruno Huyer (UFRGS) worked with Dr. Robin Wright to carry out research on Guarani Shamanism. Alana Leitao de Souza (UFPE) and Pedro Cassel (UFRGS) have been selected to attend UF in the fall 2012 semester. Michelle Blanck, an English major at UF, is finishing her semester at UFRGS where she is researching the representation of Gaucho culture in literature. UF students Jasmine Bensinger and Emiliano Slaibe have been selected to participate in the program and will be traveling to Brazil for the fall 2012 semester.

In February 2012, the Center hosted Professors Ivís Gutiérrez Guerra and Rebeca Oroza Busutil who were visiting scholars from the Center for International Migration Studies at the University of Havana. They presented a colloquium on February 16th on "Prácticas Transnacionales de los Cubanos en el Sur de la Florida: Un Análisis Preliminar", where the current role of transnational linkages of migrants was explored. The presentation addressed the linkages that, for several decades, have been established between Cubans living in the United States (and in South Florida in particular), and their country of origin. Through the analysis of various applied surveys conducted by the Institute of Cuban Research, Florida International University, and University of Havana’s Center for the Study of International Migration, it is becoming clear that the trend of transnational activity of Cuban emigration is strengthening.

This exchange took place as part of a Social Science Research Council project on international migration with the University of Havana.

Dr. Ieva Jusionyte will join UF in the fall semester as Assistant Professor in the Center for Latin American Studies and the Department of Anthropology. Jusionyte was most recently a lecturer at Brandeis University, where in April 2012 she completed her dissertation on how violence affects news production in the border area between Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay. Before attending Brandeis on a Fulbright Scholarship in 2006, Jusionyte received her B.A. in international relations and political science from Vilnius University (Lithuania) and worked in the Lithuanian media as a correspondent and news editor of an online digital daily and a freelancer for the Lithuanian National Radio and print media. During her ethnographic fieldwork in northern Argentina in 2010-2011, together with Javier Rotela, she produced and conducted a weekly investigative journalism television program “Proximidad” on a variety of locally important but silenced issues, including illegal child adoptions and child trafficking. While in Argentina, Jusionyte also made a documentary film about local firefighters and joined their ranks as a volunteer. The Association for Political and Legal Anthropology awarded the First Honorable Mention for her paper “Performing Journalism on the Backstage of the State: Illegal Airwaves, Versatile Cables, and the Struggle for Power in an Argentine Border Town,” which was based on her fieldwork. Drawing on her experience as a journalist and an anthropologist studying violence and the media, she has taught courses on Understanding Violence in the Contemporary State and Media and Violence: An Anthropological Perspective, which was awarded the University Prize Instructorship at Brandeis. At the Center for Latin American Studies at UF Jusionyte will teach and conduct further research on the media and the modes of law and governance in relation to organized crime and violence in Latin America.
FACULTY NEWS AND PUBLICATIONS

Florence Babb (Women’s Studies & Gender Research) continued research in Peru during her spring 2012 sabbatical, dividing her time between the coastal capital of Lima and the Andean city of Huaraz. In April, she was a speaker at Wesleyan University’s Center for the Americas symposium on “Authenticity in the Americas: Constructions and Contestations of Identity,” where she presented, “Are Indigenous Women More Authentic?” In May, she is presenting a paper on “Theorizing Gender and Race in the Peruvian Andes: Toward a Feminist Anthropology of Indigeneity,” at the congress of the Latin American Studies Association. Professor Babb guest edited an issue of the journal Voices, and she has a review essay in the current issue of Women’s Review of Books.

Emilio Bruna (LAS/WEC) Research conducted by Bruna was recognized by the United States Chapter of the International Association for Landscape Ecology (IALE) as the outstanding contribution to the field in 2011 for his work published in: “Disentangling the drivers of reduced long-distance seed dispersal by birds in an experimentally fragmented landscape,” (with M. Uriarte, M. Anciães, T.B. da Silva, P. Rubim, and E. Johnson). Ecology, 92(4) 2011: 924-937.

James P. Cuda (Entomology) travelled to Brazil during spring break to continue his field research to identify and collect candidate biological control agents of Brazilian peppertree, Schinus terebinthifolius, one of the most invasive weeds in Florida. The project is a collaborative effort between the University of Florida and the Universidade Regional de Blumenau (FURB). Dr. Cuda also delivered guest lectures for two courses (Entomologia Florestal and Controle Biológico) at FURB.

Tace Hedrick (English) served as Humanities Program Chair for the Southeastern Council on Latin American Studies (SECOLAS) conference held at the University of Florida, March 29-31; she also chaired two panels on the program. Her article on Chicana/Latina popular culture, “From House on Mango Street to Becoming Latina in 10 Easy Steps: Genre, Marketplace and Chicana Identity,” was published in the Spanish journal La Nueva Literatura Hispánica. She has had another article accepted on the popular Puerto Rican television personality and astrologist, entitled “Neoliberalism and Orientalism in Puerto Rico: Walter Mercado’s Queer Spiritual Capital,” forthcoming this fall in the prestigious Centro: A Journal of Puerto Rican Studies.

Peter Hildebrand (FRE) and D. Wilsey are going to the 2012 International Farming Systems Association conference in Aarhus, Denmark where Wilsey will present a paper.
he, T. Gill and A. Rios wrote on the strengths and weaknesses of Ethnographic Linear Programming. Wilsey is the senior author and he and the other two are former Hildebrand students. Hildebrand is the fourth author of the paper. The paper is based on Wilsey’s work in Mexico, Rios’ in Peru and Gill’s in Kenya.

Bette Loiselle (LAS/WEC) gave invited talks about her research in the Yasuni Biosphere Reserve (Ecuador) and the TCD program at the Universidad de los Andes and Universidad Nacional in Bogota this past October, and the Universidad San Francisco de Quito in February. She was also the graduate student invited speaker at Florida International University in Miami this past April.

Joseli Macedo (Architecture) served as Guest Editor for the special issue of the Bulletin of Latin American Research, The Urban Divide in Latin America: Challenges and Strategies for Social Inclusion (Volume 31, Issue 2, April 2012). The Center’s 58th Conference was its first annual meeting devoted to urban issues, and this special issue is comprised of six articles especially selected from the 80 papers presented at the Center’s 2009 conference. The articles published present timely research on urban issues currently dividing cities in Argentina, Brazil, El Salvador and Peru, with a collective focus on governance, political representation and participation, environmental sustainability and urban crime. The conference was co-hosted by the College of Design, Construction and Planning. Macedo also published “A (In)sustentabilidade do Desenvolvimento urbano nos Estados Unidos: o que as cidades brasileiras podem aprender com as americanas” in the Revista Paranaense de Desenvolvimento.

Terry McCoy (LAS) In March, McCoy participated in the opening session "Latin America Economic and Political Outlook" of the VII Latin American Forum: Energy & the Environment hosted in Houston by the Energy Institute of the University of Texas. In April, he was the keynote speaker at the conference "Emprendedurismo e Innovación en Contexto Actual," hosted by the Asociación de ex-Becarios Fulbright in Santo Domingo.

Gregory E. Moreland (Spanish & Portuguese Studies) presented "Professor as Student on Study Abroad (in Florianopolis, Brazil): What Can We Truly Gain from the Study Abroad Experience?’ 2012 CIBER Business Language Conference, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, March 21-24, 2012.

Tony Oliver-Smith (Anthropology) The Society for Applied Anthropology awarded Oliver-Smith the 2012 Malinowski Award for his work on disasters and involuntary resettlement, most of which was carried out in Latin America. The award is “presented to an outstanding social scientist in recognition of efforts to understand and serve the needs of the world’s societies and who has actively pursued the goal of solving human problems using the concepts and tools of social science during one’s entire career.”

Helen Safa (LAS/Anthropology) The University of Puerto Rico’s Institute of Caribbean Studies published a special issue of its journal, Caribbean Studies, in honor of Helen L. Safa. Dr. Safa participated in the November presentation of the journal, along with the two editors, L. Bolles and K. Velvington, and two of the contributors, I. Duany and A. Colón. The issue also contains articles by J. Nash and F. Babb. Dr. Safa is now Professor Emeritus at UF.

Nigel Smith (Geography) has been awarded a Fulbright to spend the fall semester in Brazil where he will be collaborating with Eduardo Neves, Director of the Archaeology Museum at the University of São Paulo, and will be delivering lectures in São Paulo and Manaus. Smith will also conduct collaborative research on the ethno botany of archaeological sites and surrounding areas.

Rick Stepp (LAS/Anthropology) Stepp’s work in Chiapas, Mexico continues on what has now become the world’s longest term ethnobotanical study. Using data going back to the mid 1960’s, he and his colleagues have been able to document persistence of traditional ecological knowledge in the region. Also, he was recently invited by the United States government to consult on a program intended to strengthen Q’eqchi’ Maya language and cultural identity within the Alta Verapaz region of Guatemala. In the spring of 2012, he served on the Latin American panel for Robert L. Boren Fellowship Competition run by the Institute for International Education in Washington, D.C.

Philip Williams (LAS) gave an invited presentation on his new book, Living “Illegal”: The Human Face of Unauthorized Immigration, at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars in April 2012. In May he will be presenting a paper, “Demilitarization after Central American Civil Wars,” at the Society for Military History conference in Washington, D.C.
The Center's Outreach Lending Library is pleased to announce the acquisition of the Panama Canal Museum in a Trunk suitcase. Donated by Carol F. Meyer, the Museum in a Trunk will join the Center's "traveling suitcases" collection, which contains artifacts and resources from Latin America available to teachers and educators across the country.

According to the Panama Canal Museum, located at Seminole, Florida, “the purpose of the Museum in a Trunk is to enable teachers to augment their lesson plans with teaching tools in order to make an in-depth study of the Panama Canal, and to foster discussions in math, science, engineering, and social studies”.

The new suitcase offers music, movies, books, class presentations, maps, and artifacts related to the construction of the Panama Canal and the country’s geography, fauna, flora, and society. The result is an interdisciplinary and comprehensive list of resources related to Panama for elementary and high school students, as well as documentaries and books that can be used by university professors. The items include molas made by the Kuna Indians, railroad rail pieces, and movies such as "A Man, a Plan, a Canal, Panama" (David McCullough and Carl Charlson), and "Panama Canal: Gateway to the American Century" (PBS). The new suitcase serves as a resource to bring the history, culture, and importance of the Panama Canal to the K-12 classroom and supplements efforts to increase research and academic exchange on Panama at UF.

Language for Careers

The Center’s Outreach Program, in collaboration with UF’s Center for International Business Education and Research (CIBER), sponsored business speakers and a “Career Track” series of sessions on language for careers at the 2011 Florida Foreign Language Association’s (FFLA) Conference in Cape Canaveral. The goal of the conference theme, The Real World of Language in the 21st Century, was to help teachers develop innovative curricula that will better prepare students for the global workplace with language and culture skills.

Some sample Career Track session titles include: Preparing Global Leaders through the Spanish Classroom, Fun and Effective Ways to Apply Business Language in K-12, The Florida/Brazil Business Link: Implications for Portuguese & Brazilian Studies, and Enhancing Cultural IQs for Success in International Careers.

The Outreach Program’s Traveling Suitcases, Outreach Lending Library, and Wiki Series were all featured at the Outreach Program booth during the conference. Teachers were encouraged by the FFLA to visit each booth through a “passport” program that offered prizes to teachers that visited the greatest number of booths. Graduate Assistant Korey Force noted, “The passport program really helped to bring educators to our booth, and once they were there, they were very interested in hearing about our resources and getting in touch with us.”

Other Outreach Program activities connecting language and culture studies to careers include presentations on Florida as the Gateway to Latin America and What Business Wants from Graduates at the Southern Business Education Association conference in Orlando, where Tampa Port CEO and CIBER Advisory Council member Richard Wainio gave a special keynote talk. Mr. Wainio also talked about The Importance of a Global Mindset at the National Business Education Association conference in Boston.

As part of the Center’s and CIBER’s effort to promote the value of foreign language and culture studies to prepare students for global careers, the Outreach Program has also developed a set of “Language for Careers” advocacy videos available on the YouTube page: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=BcZ2kDh7TSA. Other foreign language advocacy resources are available at the Network of Business Language Educator (NOBLE) webpage: http://nble.org/advocacy/.

The Center for Latin American Studies and the Tropical Conservation and Development (TCD) Program awarded more than 25 field research grants for UF graduate students to carry out Master’s thesis and pre-dissertation fieldwork in Latin America and the Caribbean in 2011. Held at Smather’s Library East on March 1, 2012, the 10th annual Field Research Clinic (FRC) gave students the chance to find out about the various research projects sponsored by the Center and TCD, and to stimulate debate with students from a broad range of disciplines. The clinic also provided an opportunity for grant recipients to showcase their work and to disseminate the results of their research to a wide audience of students and faculty members.

The FRC highlights the importance of graduate student research and raises awareness among the public about the vital importance of funding provided by the Center. The first half of the clinic consisted of a peer-learning workshop dealing with the fieldwork experience, providing new graduate students with the opportunity to voice their questions and concerns to students who have already completed their fieldwork.

The second half of the clinic was devoted to the research poster competition. The grand prize for best research poster went to Rachel Reis Morão (LAS) for her poster, “Media and Crime: The Case of Local TV in Brazil.” Rachel’s adviser is Charles Wood (LAS). Posters were evaluated by Efraín Barradas (LAS/ Spanish), Rosana Resende (LAS/ Anthropology), and Bette Loiselle (LAS/WEC).

The FRC is one of several graduate student support activities sponsored by the Center over the course of the academic year. These events serve to enhance the learning and professional preparation of LAS students.

PhD candidates Denyse Mello (advised by Dr. Marianne Schmink) and Gina Alvarado (advised by Dr. Carmen Diana Deere) were selected as finalists for the Madelyn Lockhart Dissertation Fellowship. The Association for Academic Women (AAW) at the University of Florida established the Madelyn Lockhart Dissertation Fellowship to honor an outstanding female graduate student.
Student Funding

2012 Summer Research Grant Recipients

Each year, the Center for Latin American Studies and the Tropical Conservation and Development (TCD) program award funding to UF students to conduct summer field research in Latin America. This year a total of 24 students from 13 different departments received Summer Field Research Grants. These awards are made possible by the following funding sources:

- Boonstra Family Research Fellowship
- Carol French Doughty Memorial Fund
- Center for Latin American Studies grant overhead
- Charles Wagley Research Fellowship
- NSF Innovations in Institutional Integration (iCube) Program Award
- Panama Canal Museum Research Fund
- TCD Ford Foundation Endowment
- Tinker Foundation

The Center would like to congratulate the following students on their 2012 field research awards. Each student, their degree program, and country where they will conduct their field research is listed below.

Alumni Career Profile:

Meredith Fensom

Meredith Fensom graduated from the JD/MALAS program in 2004 and was the founding director of the University of Florida’s Law & Policy in the Americas Program. Ms. Fensom served as Special Assistant in the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative’s Office of the Americas and has been engaged in many activities over the years analyzing the impact of trade agreements on countries, regions and the world, including publications and speaking engagements throughout the Americas. More recently, Ms. Fensom spent three years managing an agricultural trade business and policy consulting firm, drawing upon her diverse business, legal, government and academic experiences to aid clients in the development of global business and marketing strategies, government relations, and importing and exporting agricultural and industrial products and services. Fensom joined the Biotechnology Industry Organization (BIO) in February 2012 as Director of International Affairs, to assist in the development and execution of an international strategic plan, including organizing and conducting advocacy on key international regulatory, reimbursement and trade issues and to serve as the BIO point of contact for Brazil and Latin America. BIO is the world’s largest biotechnology organization and represents over 1,100 members engaged in the discovery, development and commercialization of biologically-based products to treat human health, improve agricultural output, and address global industrial and environmental challenges. It is an exciting field!

Q&A

What does your current position entail?

MF: In February, I joined the Biotechnology Industry Organization (BIO) as Director, International Affairs, to assist in the development and execution of an international strategic plan, including organizing and conducting advocacy on key international regulatory, reimbursement and trade issues and to serve as the BIO point of contact for Brazil and Latin America. BIO is the world’s largest biotechnology organization and represents over 1,100 members engaged in the discovery, development and commercialization of biologically-based products to treat human health, improve agricultural output, and address global industrial and environmental challenges. It is an exciting field!

What do you enjoy most about your job?

MF: The opportunity to learn every day and to work with a variety of sectors in a growing industry. Exposure to multiple regional markets is a welcome challenge, every country is different and our priority markets are some of my favorite places to visit. Whether I’m on the road or in Washington, I’m interacting with people from all over the world.

Anna Pagano (MALAS 2002) completed a PhD in Anthropology in 2011 from the University of California, San Diego and is currently a Postdoctoral Researcher in the School of Public Health at UC Berkeley. Her current research focuses on access to alcohol and drug addiction treatment for monolingual Spanish speakers. Pagano is also involved in developing projects related to drinking, drug use, and public safety in Brazil; and the relationship between substance misuse and intimate partner violence in Latin America and the U.S.

How did the Center help you prepare for your career?

MF: My decision to begin the joint degree program in Law and Latin American Studies came from an interest I have always had in the region. Experiences through the Center have been critical for every job I’ve had and the MALAS degree has been of great interest to my employers. Studying at the Center led to a Fulbright Scholarship in Chile and the opportunity to return to the University of Florida, working with the Center, to found the Law & Policy in the Americas Program. The Center laid a foundation that has shaped my career and enabled me to incorporate my interests into a profession that I enjoy immensely.
